THE EVENING STAR. THE GRAND "INVENTORY" SALE WASHINGTON: MONDAYJuly 18, 1887.

CROSBY S. NOYESEditor. The Evening Star has a regular, permanent lenn fide daily elevalation more than trebie that of any other daily paper published in Washington, and much greater than that et all the other daily papers here added

Those who leave the city during the summer can have The Star mailed to them for any length of time, and the address changed as often as desired. The subscription must be invariably paid in ad-

In addition to following the customary injunctions to keep out of the sun and to eat, drink and dress with discretion, Washingtonians should equip themselves to meet the hot wave by cultivating a cheerful and contented mind, and by discountenancing and avoiding the misguided few who work themselves and the surrounding atmosphere into furnace heat by denunctations of the Washington climate as atroclous. At present everyone is free to admit that it is hot, but surely we may find some relief in the cooling reflection of the greater miseries of others. Certainly there is no city on the Atlantic slope where fatalities due to the heat of the sun are less frequent, or where the average thermometric record for a season through is more favorable than here. The cities a long way inland suffer a great deal more than we do whenever a hot wave takes them in its course, and those on the Pacific slope are often season. Such reflections furnish a partial mindcure for the evil of excessive heat. Almost as much depends on a person's temperament and disposition as on the atmosphere itself in deternining his comfort in bot weather. One man will suffer agonies, or think he does, in the same temperature which does not disturb another's cheerfulness at all. To give unnecessary thought to one's inisfortunes always increases the difficulty of enduring them; and there are as many persons who make themselves wretched by letting their minds dwell upon the heat as of those who actually suffer torments from which there is no escape in the flesh. Don't fume, fret and worry, and if the expedient becomes necessary in order to convince you that the heat is not unbearable, have the mercury bulb dipped frequently in ice water. It is better to treat the thermometer to ice-water than yourself.

The storm of yesterday gave the telegraph and telephone poles an opportunity to demonstrate their efficacy as conductors of lightning, and emphasized one of the many reasons why the ugly and dangerous above-ground system of poles and wires should be abolished. Ordinarily, cities enjoy a comparative immunity from thunderbolts, owing to the diffusion of the electric currents by a multitude of tin roofs and a general uniformity in the heights of the buildings. The telegraph pole in the city street, however, is a perpetual menace. Its height, its shape, its metallic attachments, all make it especially attractive to the lightning; and when it stands near a dwelling, as in the case of the stricken pole in the southeast section yesterday, it is dangerous to every one in the neighborhood. When it is considered that the pole is there, not because its presence is necessary, but because on is too stingy to lay out a little ready money in funning wires underground, the whole affair takes on an irritating cast. What happened yesterday in the alley near sixth street southeast may happen anywhere in the city the next time we have a storm, but with effects infinitely worse. The poles should come down without needless delay.

For all that any one knows, the bravery of a railway fireman in Northern New York was all that stood between the President and a terrible casualty on Saturday. His chief, who either was thrown out of the locomotive-cab, or jumped to save himself, was dead, and this young man had the responsibility for the safety of the whole Presidential party on his shoulders alone. His effort to get back to the passenger car was the fruit of a startled impulse; and when his senses returned to him, and he realized that the first thing to do was to shut off steam, it required double courage to climb back into the scalding cloud and do his duty. The President's sole recorded remark, that the fireman "must be a plucky fellow," was true enough, but the occasion would admit of even a longer and stronger commentary.

England has gone to great trouble and expense only to be humiliatingly beaten in diplomacy by Russia, or whether, on the other hand, with the disclosure to Germany and Austria of Russian influence in Turkey, and the firm grip with which Egypt is now held by England, the effect of a failure to make any promises about leaving Egypt is not to Great Britain's advantage. But, how- We are selling a style of Shoe for gentlemen called the ever England or the English government may be affected finally by public opinion of the outcome of the matter, it is not disputed that Sir Henry nor is it high. As summer heat, dog-days, and hydrophobia are sides and fust high enough to support the ankle and closely connected, though probably without good reason, in the public mind, the magnificent and isserved advertisement of Pasteur furnished by the report of the British hydrophobia commission comes at a timely season. While the Postmaster-General is doing his sum. mer thinking in preparation for his winter camaign, he might address his mind to the subject of an international special delivery system. If arrangements could be made with all the countries in the postal union to provide for the instant ivery of letters bearing a particular stamp, would be a great convenience to the business community. At all events, our immediate neighbors on the north and south might be brought into a convention of this sort with marked advantage.

Mr. Beecher always denied that he ever said the weather was as hot as the anecdote credits him with pronouncing it. But when a tropical wave, ike the one now with us, comes to give the story an air of reasonableness and easy credibility, the tendency among the newspapers to reprint the contradicted slauder seems irresistible.
